

MOVING TO TRANENT COULD SERIOUSLY IMPROVE YOUR HEALTH

If thoughts of the New Year are already bringing about pledges to implement that healthy lifestyle you've always sought, then a move to Tranent on Scotland's east coast could hold the answer.

Not only does the historic town enjoy a coastal location offering stretches of sandy beaches for relaxing strolls, but it is surrounded by a staggering 19 golf courses. In addition, Loch Centre, a three star leisure facility provides all the indoor sports necessary to kick start your health regime, and when the better weather arrives a number of cricket clubs and a race course are within easy reach.

Recognising the superb environmental surroundings of the area, Walker Group has opened a new residential development in the West Windygoul area of the town, which is proving popular amongst people currently living in Edinburgh, which is only 10 miles away.

Meadow Parks is a substantial development comprising 800 new homes on completion, which will be built over the next four years.

The first phase of the development, The Whins, will be built by Walker Group and will comprise 76 new homes. Located off Ormiston Road, the Whins will symbolise the first stage of a new community for Tranent.

Styles at the Whins will include a choice of 11 different designs of four and five bedrooms, providing ideal family accommodation with prices ranging from £185,000. First entry dates are scheduled for February/March.

"There aren't many residential developments which can boast of being on the doorstep of 19 golf courses but aside from that the setting is quite special for a town which is so close to Edinburgh. Fort Kinnaird shopping centre is only a ten minute drive and Haddington only seven miles away. It really is an ideal location," said Kareen Talman, Walker Group.